

The Secrecy Protocol

The plan to keep the Morphin Grid Universe 100% secret, so the public finds out it exists by watching the films.

Rule	What it means
The universe is never announced	No slate, no phases, no saga name, no press conference. The public only hears about one film at a time.
Fans discover it on screen	Every connection is first revealed in a theater: a cameo, a shared setting, a post-credits scene.
Internal names stay internal	"Morphin Grid Universe," "The Zordon Saga" and phase numbers never appear in public.
Confirmation follows discovery	The studio only confirms what audiences have already seen for themselves.

01 • WHAT THE PUBLIC SEES

A Power Rangers movie and nothing else

- The 2013 film is marketed as a standalone Power Rangers movie for the 20th anniversary. There's no universe branding, no "Phase 1" and no mention of future films.
- Command Center Studios is public because it has to appear in the credits, but it presents as the Power Rangers film label. Nothing about it reveals a plan.
- The Fox deal is announced film by film. Multi-picture terms stay confidential.
- Casting is announced one film at a time. Multi-picture contracts are confidential, and actors who cameo are never announced or included in marketing.

02 • HOW FANS FIND OUT

The reveal happens in theaters

- Post-credits scenes are the main channel. The first glimpse of a shadowy master behind Rita, or a character who shouldn't be in this film, is how fans find out these movies connect.
- Crossover details: recurring settings (the Youth Center, Angel Grove High, the Command Center), recurring characters (Bulk and Skull, Ernie, Alpha 5) and objects that carry over. Each one is planted in a film for sharp-eyed fans to catch, not explained in advance.
- Saga titles and team-up announcements are made on screen first, never at a convention or in a trade-paper exclusive.
- The studio stays quiet on fan theories. No confirming or denying. Fans talking about what they found is the marketing.

03 • LEAK PREVENTION: SCRIPTS AND PRODUCTION

Locked down from the first draft

- Codename every production. Each film shoots under a fake working title that has nothing to do with Power Rangers, the way Marvel did. Codenames go on call sheets, trailers, permits and crew shirts.
- Scripts are watermarked to the individual reader and read only on secure devices or in reading rooms. Cast get only their own scenes, and decoy pages go out when needed. Marvel did this on Endgame.
- Everyone signs NDAs: cast, crew, vendors, VFX houses, test-screening audiences, and the executives at Fox and later Disney.

04 • LEAK PREVENTION: SHOOTING ON LOCATION

Protecting real locations, practical suits and actors doing their own stunts

- The location-first mandate brings the biggest leak risk: set photos. Practical suits, monster costumes and Zord builds out in public are hard to hide, so every location shoot follows these rules:
- Closed perimeters with screening walls, controlled access, no-fly zones for drones, and a no-phones rule for crew.
- Suits and creatures are covered between takes and moved only in closed vehicles. Monsters that reveal plot points shoot on soundstages or at remote locations.
- Decoy material: dummy shots, fake costumes and misleading call sheets so whatever leaks points the wrong way.
- Crossover cameos shoot under fake names on closed days with a minimal crew.

05 • LEAK PREVENTION: MARKETING AND MERCHANDISE

Don't spoil it ourselves

- Trailers never show crossover material. When needed, they use altered shots to protect reveals, a tactic Marvel used too.
- Toys are a common source of leaks. Bandai, which held the Power Rangers toy license in 2013, gets sanitized designs for anything plot-sensitive, and spoiler figures ship after release.
- Press junkets come with talking-point briefs. Cast are trained to deflect any question about other films or connections.

This charter is part of the secret

- Every development PDF, including this one, is eyes-only. They're shared on a need-to-know basis, watermarked, and kept in private, access-controlled storage.
- Only the Command Center Story Group, President Judd Lynn and Chairman Haim Saban see the full saga plan. Directors and writers get only what their film needs.

This is a fictional, alternate-history development document created for creative purposes. Real films, people and companies are cited as reference and don't imply any real involvement or endorsement.